It has come to the notice of the Inspector-General that in most Schools teachers go to schools without sufficient preparation, thereby making their lessons less intelligent and less useful. It is an established fact that no lesson can be made successful and interesting unless the teacher has a thorough grasp of the subject he teaches and has previously arranged the method of his delivery. It is desirable that every teacher should previously study the portion meant for the full year, so that he may be in advance of his daily lessons. Lecture or teaching notes are quite necessary to prevent waste of time in the class room. With a thorough preparation every teacher will have perfect confidence in the success of his lesson.

The attention of the Head Masters is drawn to above points and they are requested to see that the assistant masters follow the suggestions. The Inspecting Officers should at the time of inspection insist upon the production of teaching notes from teachers and should note the absence of such notes as one of the defects. Inspection reports submitted by all inspecting Officers should include reference to the manner in which each member of the teaching staff has acquitted himself in respect of the above particulars.'

(Sd) B. DASAPPA,
FOR INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF EDUCATION.

I have no objection to the object of the circular. It is very good and it does honour to the head that conceived it. I cannot, however, refrain from pointing out that even such a good circular will become barren of good results, if the author of the circular is unable to be fair and just all round and if he is incapable of the appreciation of good work, wherever it is found, either in a brahmin or in a non-brahmin, in a man or a woman, in one to whom he is attached or not attached. An Inspector-General of Education as well as every responsible officer of the State should show a spirit of complete detachment in doing his responsible official duties. He must bear in mind that even the Czar of Russia will shortly have to answer for his conduct before the tribunal of Public Opinion. In a model State like Mysore, reckless vandalism will never pay. I hope His Highness the Maharaja will order Mr. Reddy to produce all the confidential D O's he had
